A painting of world-class

The men of the industry are a group portrait painted by P.S. Krøyer in 1903-1904. The painting was carried out on the order of the engineer and the manufacturer G.A. Hagemann[1] and shows 53 men attached either to the industrialization of Denmark or to engineering progress in Denmark in the second half of the 1800s.

The selection of people in the image is not representative, but rather shows industrialmen in Hagemann's network. Thus, there are several of the large manufacturers of time that have not been given space here. The painting also contains an excess of engineers, but is on the other hand not a reproduction of a professional gathering. The depicted persons are a group of leading technicians from the iron and metal industry and the chemical-technical industry and men from the domain of public supply.
